The Brattan-Taylor Village Store, a single story building of 16 x 22 feet was built in 1838 on Main Street in Mardela Springs (then known as Barren Creek), Maryland by Joseph Brattan. Mr. Thomas B. Taylor came to work in the store for Mr. Brattan in 1847 and later bought the store property and formed a partnership with Washington R. Melson. In 1853 Mr. Taylor bought his partner's share and operated the store for over forty years. After his death in 1901 the property was sold and over the years was operated by various owners. The last owner was A. Rowe Elliott who died in 1966. Mrs. Elliott, at the age of 92, sold it to J. Howard and Louise H. Adkins in 1979. They restored the building and opened it as a museum in 1980. The building has been enlarged several times and has grown to a two and one half story building with a single story addition on three sides. In 2000 the building was moved to the grounds of the Adkins Historical and Museum Complex in Mardela.

The Adkins Historical and Museum Complex, Inc. was created and developed in 1980 by J. Howard and Louise Adkins. The buildings in the complex include: the Brattan-Taylor Country Store, English-Gravenor One Room School, Young's Purchase Farmhouse, Doctor's Office, Memorial Building, Cannery Warehouse, Livery Stable, Odd Fellows Hall, Whitelock Victorian Home, and the Rockawalkin Train Depot. All buildings are furnished as closely as possible to the period. Various collections are exhibited from time to time and tours may be scheduled by appointment. Visit their website at: <http://adkinsmuseum.com/> for more information.

The storekeeper at numerous times was also the postmaster. Various postal records from 1839 to the 1950s are on display. Around 1900 the second floor was a sewing room. Some of the cloth remnants, buttons, buckles, etc. are on display. The original folding key for the front entrance door is also on display. The store contains a candy case, pot-bellied stove, original counter, and many interesting artifacts relating to life in the 19th century.

Numerous record books were found in the attic. The store's day books and ledger books carry complete coverage of the store's operations from 1847 to 1877. Ladies' accounts are found in the seven ladies books that cover the period from 1850 to 1877. These are the only ladies store account books known to exist in the state of Maryland. These ledgers have been microfilmed and are available at the Nabb Center for research. Four of the women's ledgers, such as the volume contained here, have also been transcribed by a volunteer at the Nabb Center. The transcribed volumes are titled so they match the titles found on the microfilm at the Nabb Center.

These ledgers can be used for a variety of purposes. They can be used to locate individuals residing in the Barren Creek area who might not be found in any other records. Purchasing patterns can help determine the lifestyles of the family. In the accompanying article that follows this introduction in Book 1, is an article written by Robert Graham, a Salisbury University history student intern at the Nabb Research Center, in which he analyzes the purchases more thoroughly and describes the merchandise. Note that the married women seemed to be addressed as "Mrs." with the husband's name (Mrs. Charles O. Bradley) and widows appear to be named by their own name (Mrs. Irma Bradley). Sometimes there may be children listed (Sally Windsor).

During the nineteenth century, the village store was a community's hub for trade and exchange. It was a one stop shop for all things that could not be produced in the home. It was a grocery, hardware, and clothing store, pharmacy and post office all conveniently located in one small house. It was a social gathering spot, unique in that it was the one building in the village in which every member of the community entered for one reason or another. The ledgers left by these shops of old give modern people a distinctive view of the lifestyles led by villagers based on examination of the merchandise that those people purchased and the goods which they used as payment. In addition, these documents provide detailed glimpses into the function of local economies and allow us to peer in on changing needs and styles over time. Of particular interest are the women's ledgers left by the Bratten-Taylor Village Store of Barren Creek Springs Somerset County, Maryland, present-day Mardela Springs, Maryland. These documents provide very rare information because they are the only women's account books known to exist in the Maryland. This essay consists of information derived from one of the ledgers.

The Bratten-Taylor Village Store was originally the Bratten Store. Built in the late 1830s, probably 1838, by Joshua Bratten and his sons, it served as the general store for an area known as Barren Creek Springs outside of Salisbury, Maryland. The first purchases of merchandise by Mr. Bratten were in 1838 so the store most likely opened its doors to the public in that year. Joshua died at age 54 that same year. In his will he left his eldest son Anthony a tract of land called "Young's Purchase" as well as 154 acres of a tract called "Ill Neighborhood" which included "the house" and "Buildings". It can be assumed that among these buildings on the land known as "Ill Neighborhood" was the store and it, along with the area of "Ill Neighborhood" which contained the buildings was sold by Anthony to his brother Joseph Bratten in 1840. It is known that Joseph's younger brother Samuel was the store keeper and postmaster in 1847 and another Bratten brother, Lemuel Rush, ran the store in 1849 and 1850. The store was a stepping stone for the Bratten boys. Each brother except Franklin, the second-eldest, and James Thomas seems to have participated in the store's operation for a relatively short time then moved on to other pursuits. Franklin, the second-eldest is not documented as having been involved with the store; yet, he most likely contributed to its building. James Thomas Bratten away from home at the time of his father's death. It seems that the store was a Bratten family operation between the time of its construction in 1838 until 1847 when a man named Thomas B. Taylor was hired as a clerk.

Lemuel Rush Bratten decided to become a doctor and he left his position as store operator in 1850 to pursue a medical degree at the University of Maryland Medical School. This ended the era of the Bratten family store for Mr. Taylor took over as store operator in that same year. Thomas Taylor was a real go-getter. He was orphaned as a child yet he managed to become one of the most prominent citizens of the area. He owned much land, the village store and a trading vessel by the time of his death. In six short years he worked his way up from a clerk employed by the Bratten brothers to sole owner of the store, the merchandise within it and the land surrounding it. He first purchased only the merchandise within the store with a financial partner named Washington R. Melson in 1850. By 1852 he had purchased the land and the buildings on it, including the store, from Joseph Bratten and in 1853 his partner left the area, leaving Thomas Taylor sole owner. Three years later, Mr. Taylor enlarged the building and expanded its capacity. He was obviously a hard worker and saw the importance of his labor. He cared for his customers, took pride in his ability to provide for them, and he was clever with words. In his first ledger book he wrote “ The village store – where gathered good people both rich and poor – May all that is written here be written correctly forevermore.” ¹

The ledger I analyzed covers a period of five years in the early 1850s. During this time sixty-two women are recorded as having made purchases at the store. For each of these sixty-two, a visit to the store would have been an experience like no other in the village. The first oddity of this house was the wooden mailboxes that stood outside. The store was also the post office and it would have been the only building with mailboxes at its front. A quick climb up the wooden porch steps would lead the customer to the heavy wooden entrance doors of the store room. As a woman pulled on the door with much effort she would notice the old iron lock on it which could only be opened with an antique folding key. She would then step onto the sturdy floor boards constructed of heart pine. Heart pine is a type of wood that is rare today because it is the very center of an old pine tree that has died and dried inside of the living tree. Today pine trees are harvested long before heart pine can develop. Heart pine has a rich, dark color and is very strong and long lasting.² As she walked across the strong floor boards, she would be awed by the diversity of items that rested on the fourteen inch heart-pine shelves. The tiny 16 x 22 feet room was lined with shelves containing fabrics of various weaves and materials, a rainbow of colorful dyes, and objects ranging from books to tea pots to gun powder and everything in between. Her sweet tooth would be attracted to the glass candy case next to the small metal milk cooler. The friendly voice of the clerk would greet her from the behind the heart pine counter “hello, what can I do for you”. She would turn and meet the grinning, youthful face of Thomas Taylor, anxious to assist and please his valued customer and neighbor.³

The merchandise carried by the store can be divided into seven basic categories – fabrics, clothing, dyes, medicines, tools, kitchen items, and personal items. The category containing the most purchases by women was fabrics, along with items that are used in the process of making clothing out of fabric such as, thread, needles and thimbles. The next most popular category among women was foods, followed by kitchen items. This most basic analysis of the data confirms our assumption that the thing that most occupied women was caring for their homes and their labor consisted mainly of clothing and feeding their families. The fact that women were also purchasing items that were generally considered as belonging in the realm of male activities such as nails, hinges and gun powder, shows that it was the woman’s place to shop for her entire family. While she was out purchasing fabrics and foods she would also pick up tobacco for her husband and occasionally candy for her children. The ledger often recorded that a woman bought things specifically for family members. A Mrs. Samuel Codray bought $.37 ½ worth of “merchandise for daughter” and Mrs. Joseph Wright bought “fan & lace, and brae (braid?) for Sally” as well as “needles for Julia and a small pair of shoes.” Mrs. Codray bought things that were definitely for her daughter; but, we do not know what those items were. Mrs. Wright bought a fan, lace, brae and needles for Sally and Julia; but, we cannot be certain that they were her daughters. She also bought a small pair of shoes which could not have been meant for herself, so she must have been shopping for children who were too young to do so themselves and they were most likely her daughters.

The fabric item purchased most was calico. Calico was a simple cloth made of cotton and imported from India. Its name was derived from the city of Calcutta, where it was originally manufactured and exported.⁴ This Indian fabric was the most popular material that women chose to use to cloth their families within the Barren Creek village. This shows the remaining dependence on imports from the British Empire and that local fabric production was less than that of imports because domestic, a similar cotton cloth produced locally,⁵ totaled 106.5 yards while calico totaled 158 yards. It was not the only imported fabric. In contrast to this, women often bought raw cotton and spun it into fabric themselves. It is difficult to determine just how much of this raw cotton was purchased because there were varying measurements used to identify the amounts sold such as blocks and spools. It is not known how much cotton is contained in a block or a spool. We can get a general idea of how much cotton was bought because we know that eight blocks and seven spools were purchased as well as four pounds, so it can be assumed that a substantial amount of raw cotton was purchased. That meant that a significant number of women spun their own fabric from raw material. Seven dozen buttons, as well as five cans of hooks & eyes, a type of fastener, were purchased demonstrating that the women had to buy all the parts of an article of clothing and then put it all together. When compared to the very small amounts of pre-made clothing that was purchased and taking into account that even those who bought fabric, rather than raw cotton, had much work to do before an article of clothing was produced, we can see that the vast majority of clothing that kept the villagers warm in the winter and protected them from the hot sun in the summer was the result of a great deal of painstaking labor by the village women.

There were many other fabrics carried by the store, none of which were nearly as popular as calico and domestic, probably due to the inexpensiveness and practicality of those two. All of the other fabrics totaled less than one quarter the amount of domestic. Muslin was a cotton fabric used for clothing and bed sheets.⁶ Only 10 ½ total yards were sold, even though its cost was 10 cents per yard, about the same price as domestic or calico, depending on quality, implying that either there was less of it that the store was able to carry or that calico and domestic were much preferred over muslin. Another cotton fabric carried by the store was gingham. This was a colorful fabric because the yarn was dyed before it was woven and it could be a solid color or have colorful patterns like stripes or checkers.⁷ At 16 cents per yard it was more costly than the more standard fabrics which explains why only 4 ¾ total yards were sold. Perhaps women preferred to buy plain fabric and dye it in a self-designed pattern. A fine linen fabric called lawn sold 25 1/2 yards and cost 18 ¾ cents per yard. This shows that people were willing to pay larger sums for better quality fabrics but they did this less often than when they invested in more cost-effective fabrics. There were other coarse linens imported from Hanover called oznaburg, named for its province of origin,⁸ as well as fine linens imported from Ireland. In addition, 29 yards of bed covering, called bed tick, used for padding and warmth, were sold as well as 9 yards of drilling which was a heavy and strong cloth used to make durable clothing and window drapes. Dress trimmings, lace and silks were also sold showing that women did have extra time and money to create decorative clothing in addition to practical clothing. It was the woman's responsibility to purchase these diverse fabrics and create clothing, bedding and decorations for her family.

An important part of the process of making clothes was the dying of fabric. Some fabrics were colorful before purchase but most required dying or the wearer would feel plain and lack style. The store sold four kinds of dyes – copperas, indigo, madder and poke. The only imported dye was indigo which was essential for fine blue colors. It was derived from the indigo plant and imported from India. It could be mixed with golden rod blossoms for green colors and was also used as ink.⁹ At 10 cents per ounce, indigo was far more expensive than the other dyes, but must also have been more powerful because only 3 1/2 total ounces were sold while the other dyes were sold by the pound. Copperas was used for both dying and ink making. It is ferrous sulfate, an astringent used for yellows and greens.¹⁰ Its cost was 5 cents per pound and it sold 4 ½ total pounds. Both madder and poke were used for red colors. Madder was derived from the root of the rubia plant¹¹ and at 20 cents per pound it cost twice as much as poke which came from poke berries and was also used for violets and purples.¹² With these four dyes, women were able to brighten up their world with green, yellow, blue, purple and red colors. They also had easy access to browns from the bark of many local trees. As the buyers and users of dyes, women are credited with the creation of stylish and colorful dress. It was they who transformed drab and boring clothing into bright and vibrant outfits.

When an article of clothing was finally completed the work did not end. The woman was responsible for cleaning the clothes after use, ironing them to remove wrinkles and repairing them when they tore. Wash basins and soap were bought and used by women to scrub the filth out of their families' garments. A sadiron, predecessor to the modern iron, was purchased meaning that some families possessed fine garments that required extra care. Inevitably clothing would wear and tear during the long hours of hard labor that the villagers were subjected to in their rough environment. When this happened the woman would come to the rescue with her extra scraps of fabric, her scissors, needles and thread and with her expertise and motivated by love of her family, she would patch up and refit garments so well that they could be passed down to future generations.¹³

In addition to clothing her family adequately, the woman's other main duty was to feed it well. It seems most food was produced by the family itself; food items purchased consisted of spices and sweeteners and the most common forms of currency used for payment were chickens and eggs, suggesting that the raising of chickens by villagers was very common and they and their eggs were traded for foods that were less easily self-produced. Cloves, pepper, salt and nutmeg were bought and used to add flavor to meals that were created due to the hunting and farming of the villagers themselves. Coffee and sugar were often bought together in large sums suggesting that these were both items that were not self-produced and that the sugar was mainly used to sweeten the bitter coffee that villagers used to boost their energy during their long hours of manual labor. Honey was traded by a Miss Bidy Brown for the items that she needed and that honey was then sold by the store to other customers to add flavor to their bland meals. Molasses was also popular for this reason; 5 total gallons were sold.

For the purposes of this essay, foods can be broken into two categories. Foods provided by the store and foods used as payment by its customers. Foods that the store sold were foods that the villagers were unable to produce themselves while payment foods were edibles produced by villagers and used to barter for other items. Purchased foods were mainly those mentioned above, sweeteners, spices and coffee. The main payment foods were chickens, eggs and butter. Butter and eggs were sold in small quantities by the store suggesting that some people did not produce those things on their own. Nineteen pounds of butter were purchased while over 70 pounds were used as payment so butter, like chickens and eggs, was certainly an essential item that the villagers produced and traded; however, not all of them did so and some needed to buy those items. Other purchased foods were cans of crackers, sweet cakes and boxed lilly white, a type of flour. These foods were pre-packaged and would have made the grocery shopping experience closer to what we are familiar with in modern stores with almost all foods boxed and some already prepared. It seems that some of these villagers began to have a taste of modern convenience; but, most continued to purchase only additives for foods that they produced and prepared themselves. Lemons were sold rarely indicating that they were difficult to import. All of this gives a clear image of a village woman feeding chickens, collecting eggs, churning butter and then taking those items to the Bratten-Taylor Store to trade them for salt to preserve the meat hunted by her husband, coffee and sugar in order to provide a tasty beverage that would help him to shake off his drowsiness as he woke with the sun to begin a long hard day of working in the fields, pepper to flavor the meat that she will cook for supper and molasses that she will use to sweeten the biscuits that she will feed to her family for breakfast.

In addition to chickens, eggs, and butter, cash was also a very popular form of payment.

Forty six dollars and sixty eight and one half cents were recorded as the total amount of cash used by women as payment in this book. This was a substantial amount of money for the time and indicates that these villagers did not totally rely on bartering for their trade. Other types of currency used as payment included chestnuts, rags, washing clothes, stockings, bees wax, honey, dried peaches and soap. These, however, were used much more rarely than those previously mentioned and cannot be considered as standard forms of payment. It seems that women would sometimes lack cash, chicken and butter and would be forced to trade rags, wash clothes or even their stockings in order to obtain the items that they needed. Chestnuts and dried peaches were used infrequently suggesting that those goods were rarely produced in enough excess to allow for trade. Honey and bees wax were only traded by Miss Bidy Brown indicating that she may have been the village bee keeper. Soap was more often bought than traded meaning that fewer women produced soap than those who chose to buy it.

In addition to the production of food and the purchasing of sweeteners and spices, it was up to the woman to prepare a delicious meal and then serve it to her family tastefully. Plates, cups, bowls, pitchers and spoons were all bought in large quantity showing that women were willing to spend money in order to serve their meals in an elegant fashion rather than allowing their families to eat barbarically. Five sets of cups and saucers were bought as well as a coffee mill and two coffee pots; they seemed to take their coffee drinking seriously. Tea was also a popular beverage as many tea pots and tea glasses were bought but never actual tea.

One wonders where the tea came from if not from the store. One oven was bought which would have made cooking easier for the purchaser because, without an oven, a spider, a metal pan on top of long metal legs meant to stand over an open fire, would have been used. Not all of the village women were lucky enough to have an oven, evidenced by the sale of one spider recorded in the ledger.

The store also served as an early pharmacy. Medication could be bought to help treat the numerous illnesses that the villagers faced. A common treatment of illness at the time was simply to use opiates to ease the pain of the sufferer and encourage sleep. Laudanum was sold occasionally at the store and was a morphine drug used for such purposes and was also a suicide method.¹⁴ Boxes of “pain killer” were sold which were most likely opiates in pill form. The reality of the time was that many illnesses had no effective treatment and many people could not afford to see a doctor so the best that they could do was to use these dangerously addictive drugs to ease their suffering. Camphor, a gum found in Chinese evergreen trees, was swallowed to treat hysteria, nervousness and diarrhea. It was externally used for rheumatism and respiratory conditions and can be found today in Vick’s VapoRub.¹⁵ Soap was considered a medical treatment for the itch and helped to heal sores on the skin. It was made into pills and swallowed to prevent kidney stones and, like castor oil, was used as a laxative.¹⁶ Lemuel Rush Bratten returned from medical school in 1854 and began his medical practice in a small house located behind the store.¹⁷ One can imagine patients of Dr. Bratten exiting his medical office and walking the short distance to the store to pick up drugs recommended by the doctor to treat their illnesses. We can get an idea of women, as the purchasers of these medications, being responsible for the entire well-being of families. They not only clothed and fed their families, but were also depended on when their loved ones fell ill. It was the woman's duty to keep her family healthy and happy.

The caring that women did for their families seems to have been the central aspect of their lives; yet, occasionally they did buy personal items to please themselves. Brushes, both for hair and teeth, combs, hair pins and cosmetic powders were popular purchases showing that then, as now, women found pleasure in making themselves look pretty. They also bought fans to keep themselves cool during the warm summers, as well as letter paper, envelopes and postage to communicate with friends and family. While they did occasionally splurge and buy themselves personal items, at the same time they did not stop thinking of their families. They bought candy for their children and large quantities of snuff, tobacco and pipes for their husbands. They cared for the education of their children for they bought books of arithmetic and English grammar as well as candles for study at night. Chamber pots, shoes, hats and gloves were all bought by women and intended for use by their families. It seems that women were constantly thinking of their duties and caring for their loved ones although they did occasionally buy some things just for themselves.

The tiny store house built by Joshua Bratten and his sons in 1838 and later taken over by Thomas Taylor provided all of this merchandise for the female patrons of Barren Creek Village. Mr. Taylor was very successful in his endeavors for shortly after enlarging the store in the mid-1850s, he, in partnership with Dr. Bratten, had a schooner called the Chesapeake Trader built in Vienna, Maryland. It was an 82 foot long vessel with a crew of four men meant for trade in the Chesapeake Bay. This indicates that Mr. Taylor was a shrewd businessman and he had the wisdom to cut out the middle man and have his merchandise delivered to his store using a boat that he owned to eliminate shipping fees. In 1869 he was elected county commissioner as a Democrat. In 1883 he was elected as a member of the Maryland State Legislature. At the time of his death at the age of 78 in 1901, he owned large amounts of land in Barren Creek Springs with no one to leave it to as he had remained a bachelor for his entire life. It seems that Mr. Taylor worked too hard to create his own family.¹⁸
